Assisted Dying

- In texts of citizens writing their opinions, for a government audience, on something as controversial as Assisted Dying, what can corpus linguistics bring to the table?

- Three questions:

  - What is linguistically polarized in this debate?
  - How do these polarized ideas lead to contested meanings?
  - What are some societal implications?

The cases both for and against Scotland's Assisted Dying Bill

By Professor June Andrews And Liam McArthur

As MSPs prepare to vote on the Assisted Dying Bill, dementia expert Professor June Andrews and Liam McArthur MSP offer arguments from both sides of the debate

When they decide whether to advance legislation on "assisted dying", MSPs will vote according to their conscience. But their opinions ought to be based on better knowledge about dying, the current law, and a careful scrutiny of what's missing from this bill.

"Assisted dying" sounds compassionate, even humane. But the claim that there's public support is built on dangerously simplistic questions, and this is about your conscience, right? Not populism.

Assisted dying can't be sanitised. Stop trying

MPs' attempts to improve Kim Leadbeater's Terminally Ill Adults (End of Life) Bill have only revealed that the entire project is confused

Sarah Ditum | Tuesday May 13 2025, 8.43pm BST, The Times

I spent the beautiful early summer weekend sitting on a bench in the sunshine, talking about death. I was with a close friend who works as a hospice chaplain. Much of her job involves dispensing spiritual consolation and makeshift blessings.

But the main thing that troubles the dying, she says, has nothing to do with faith. As people face the end of their life, the same question comes up again and

MSPs vote on Liam McArthur's assisted dying bill on Tuesday but Holyrood has a poor record when it comes to conscience bills like this

Iain Macwhirter | Sunday May 11 2025, 6.01pm BST, The Times

Reformers are confident that the Liberal Democrat MSP Liam McArthur's Assisted Dying for Terminally Ill Adults (Scotland) Bill will win a majority in the Scottish parliament on Tuesday. I'm not so sure.

Should it be legal for a doctor to assist a terminally ill patient in ending their life by prescribing life-ending medication?

Do you think it should be legal or not for a doctor to assist a patient aged 18 or over in ending their life by prescribing life-ending medication that the patient can take themselves, if all the conditions for assisted dying outlined above are met?*

Yes, it should be legal for a doctor to assist a patient in ending their life by prescribing life-ending medication that the patient could take themselves

No, it should not be legal for a doctor to assist a patient in ending their life by prescribing life-ending medication that the patient could take themselves

Base: 1,130 Online U.K. adults aged 16-75, 1-2 October 2024. * Visit the Ipsos website to see information given to respondents about assisted dying before they answered this question (Slide 2).

Personal Experience

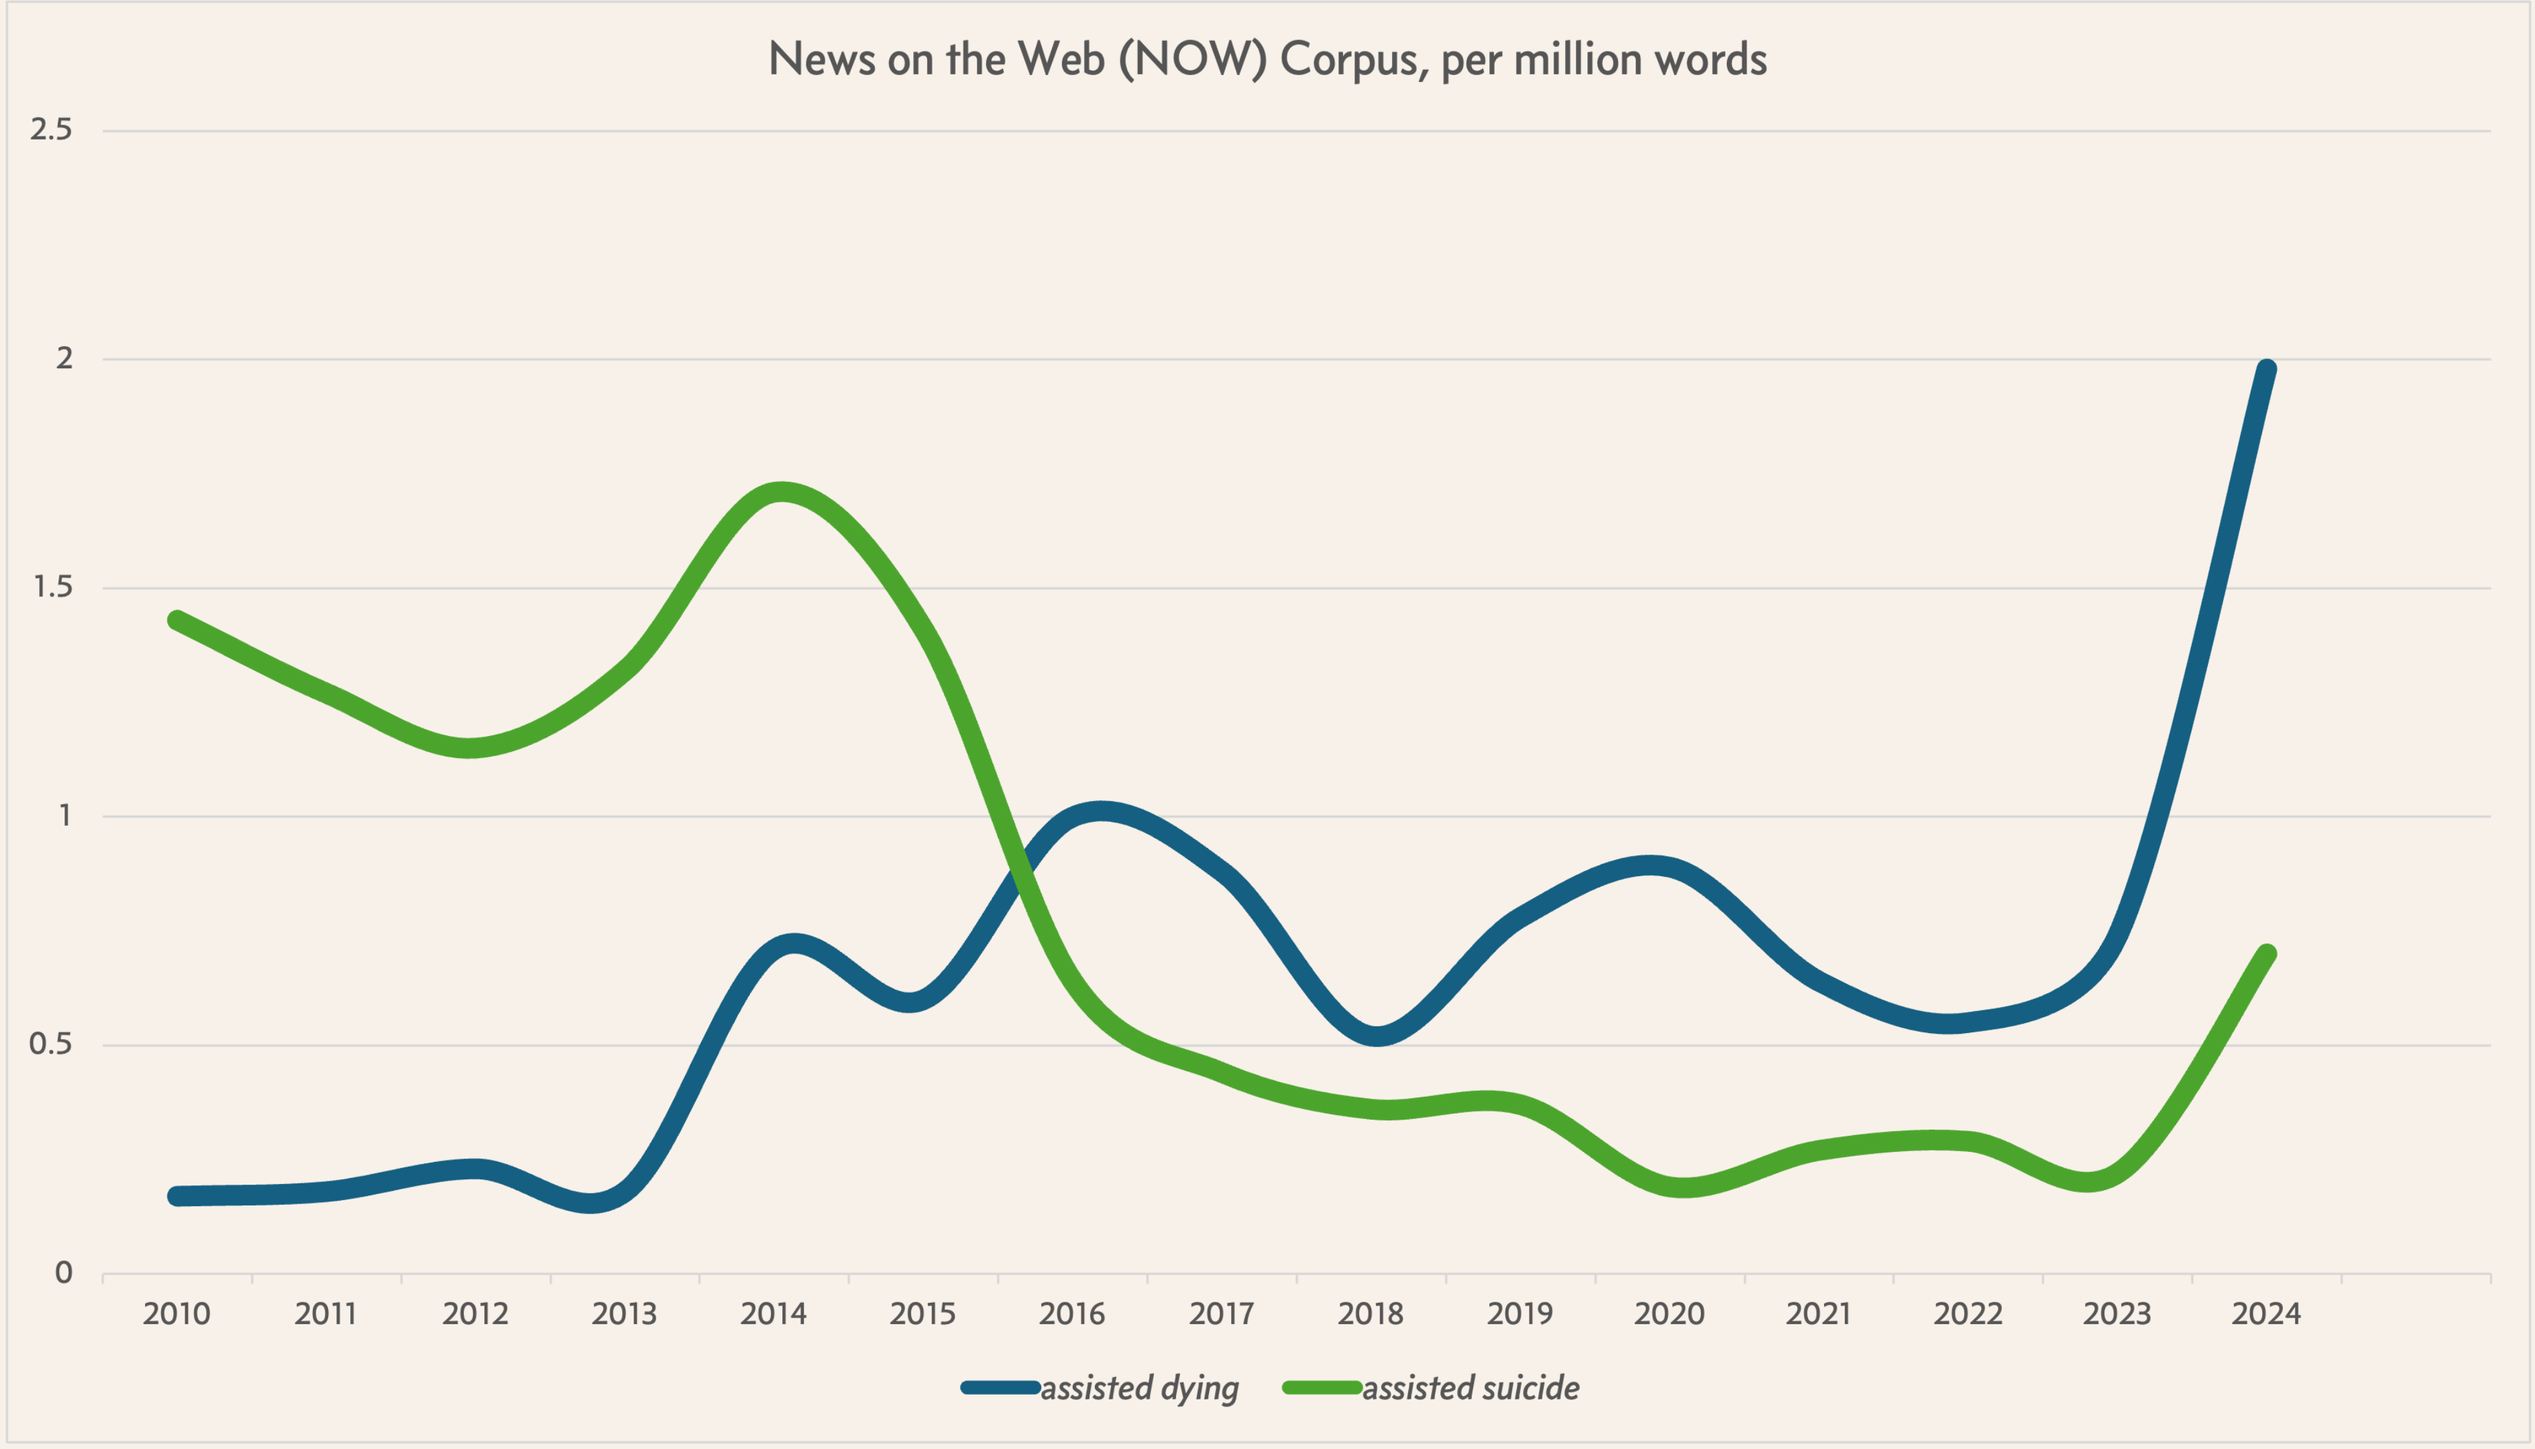

> For 26 years I worked in the emergency service […] I have witnessed at first hand and close up the sheer desperation and suffering caused by terminal illness. I have had to examine bodies and scenes where the person has died alone and in obvious agony. People with cancer who have vomited and excreted blood and body matter into bowls, coal scuttles, sinks, beds, floors etc.. before finally dying, often over a period of days and weeks […] I was also called to all suicides and lost count of the number of people I have had to cut down from their nooses whilst their grieving family cried in the adjacent room. […] In April 2020 I was diagnosed with inoperable pancreatic cancer and given 6-12 months to live if I chose not to have palliative chemotherapy, and possibly 18 months if I chose to undertake it. My world fell apart and I had to break the news to my wife and two sons. […] I am a proud and private individual who does not want to spend my final days, weeks, or god forbid months, in a hospital or hospice, in pain with no quality of life and having to be lifted off a bed pan or worse! I do not want to be forced into ending my life alone, maybe in my car with the embers of a disposable BBQ smouldering in the boot, or hanging in a lonely wood waiting for some poor unsuspecting member of the public to find me – but with no compassionate alternative that is what I will do.

Why Is This Interesting?

- A rich dataset (separate to social media) with citizens writing persuasive texts
- Shows profound disagreements between citizens, and is linguistically highly oppositional
- Broad societal implications of outcomes

Current Situation

- September 2021: Assisted Dying for Terminally Ill Adults (Scotland) Bill
- Key differences from previous attempts:
  - Limited to terminally ill, mentally competent adults
  - Scottish residency requirement (12+ months)
  - Requires evaluation by two independent doctors
  - Multiple decision points and waiting periods
  - Self-administration requirement

Terminology

No terminology choice is neutral in this debate

- “Assisted Dying”: Term used in current bill’s title
- “Assisted Suicide”: Primarily used by opponents
- “Euthanasia”: Not accurate for current bill (euthanasia is physician-administered and this bill requires self-administration)

2021 "Easy Read Consultation Summary"

"Over three quarters supportive"

"Lots of these people thought:

—it would be kind to let adults who are terminally ill have a safe assisted death if they wanted it.

—it would stop their pain and suffering.

—assisted dying should be allowed in Scotland because it's allowed in some other countries."

Personal Experience: Supporting

“It’s about choice. Currently, other people’s choices prevent those who are terminally ill from dying when they wish to. That’s cruel and unfair.”

“It’s about compassion and autonomy. I have medical knowledge and know that some natural deaths can never be made ‘good’. Drugs have their limits.”

“We will surely look back and wonder why it took so very long and why so many people had to yield to a process which denies them control, autonomy and dignity, because we were not brave enough to approach this subject in a calm, rational and compassionate way.”

Personal Experience: Supporting

“I had to watch my dad die of pancreatic cancer.”

“I was fully prepared to put myself at risk and buy him drugs from the dark web so that he could stop the pain. However, my daddy told me it was too risky for me, as I work in the legal sector. So I didn’t take it any further. But in what world should this be allowed to happen?”

“I’m sitting here in tears thinking about him. I just wish I hadn’t listened to him and got him the drugs. Even in the hospice he was still saying if there was an injection or a pill, he would take it. Nobody should need to go through this. It’s killing me. He should have been able to leave on his own terms. He shouldn’t have had to suffer and waste away. We don’t treat dogs like this.”

Excerpts

2021 “Easy Read Consultation Summary”

“Just under a quarter not supportive”

> “Some people thought:
> —it was wrong for a person to take their own life, or to get help to end their life.
> —it wouldn’t be safe because you wouldn’t know for sure if the person was making the choice for themselves.
> —older people or disabled people might feel worried about other people trying to choose for them. They might feel less important.”

Religious Perspective: Opposing

> “This is a radical change attacking the very roots of welfare and wellbeing – and trust – and would change society.”

> “We were created in the Image of God – and if this goes forward, we are challenging LIFE – and VALUES and STANDARDS. Does LIFE mean we have a new meaning of LIFE? Parts of society decided to take life in the womb before life was born into the world – now some want to end life before life is over.”

> “One day each of us has to stand before Almighty God – and answer for the decisions we have made – whether we believe it or not – whether we want to or not.”

“Slippery Slope” Concerns

> “Thus Belgium’s initial law in 2002 expanded from almost exclusively terminally ill cancer patients to patients with psychological illnesses such as severe depression or personality disorder and more recently to competent minors. In Canada, the 2016 law which allowed medical assisted dying for physical health reasons was expanded in 2021 to include patients with mental health conditions.”

> “In Oregon, 5% of patients dying by assisted suicide gave financial reasons for their decision. Those giving as the reason the ‘becoming a burden on family, friends or caregivers’ increased from 13% in 1998 to 55% in 2017.”

> “The British Geriatrics Society, the Association for Palliative Medicine of Great Britain and Ireland, the majority of the British Medical Association members who are involved in palliative care or geriatric medicine oppose the legalisation of assisted dying.”

> Critics fear it could leave vulnerable people exposed to unwanted pressure. Opponents include the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Most Rev Justin Welby. He said that while the safeguards in the bill are stronger than in previous attempts, they still do not go far enough. “What we want is assisted living, not assisted dying,” he said.

Q8: We suggest selecting 'Negative'.

Please use the box to say that the proposals would have a negative impact on the elderly and disabled, to whom the Bill would send a signal that certain lives are no longer worth living. It is also individuals in these categories who are most likely to feel pressurised into considering assisted dying. In the absence of the Bill, such pressure would not exist.

6. Conclusion

Our Questions

We began with three questions:

1. What is linguistically polarized in this debate?
2. How do these polarized ideas lead to contested meanings?
3. What are some societal implications?

Elusive Consensus

These linguistic polarisations show societal and ethical divisions. The use of a fundamentally different ethical language means three things are contested in these debates:

- Contested conceptualization of death: is death conceptualized as part of medical care (to be optimised) or as a moral threshold (to be respected)?
- Contested linguistic authority: experiential-based versus principle-based language: “I watched my mother die” versus “life is always sacred”/“doctors should never kill”; choice/dignity/decide versus vulnerable/pressure/safeguards; crafting individual moral reasoning versus amplifying that of others.
- Contested meaning of the vulnerable: those facing painful death or those facing pressure to end their own lives?

Terminology: "Assisted Dying"

- Term used in current bill's title
- Prevalent in consultations and media
- Primarily used by supporters
- Distinguished from suicide by supporters of the term as "people in question are not choosing death over a healthy life"
- Relatively new term (last 15 years in UK)
- Can emphasise disease/death "process" underway

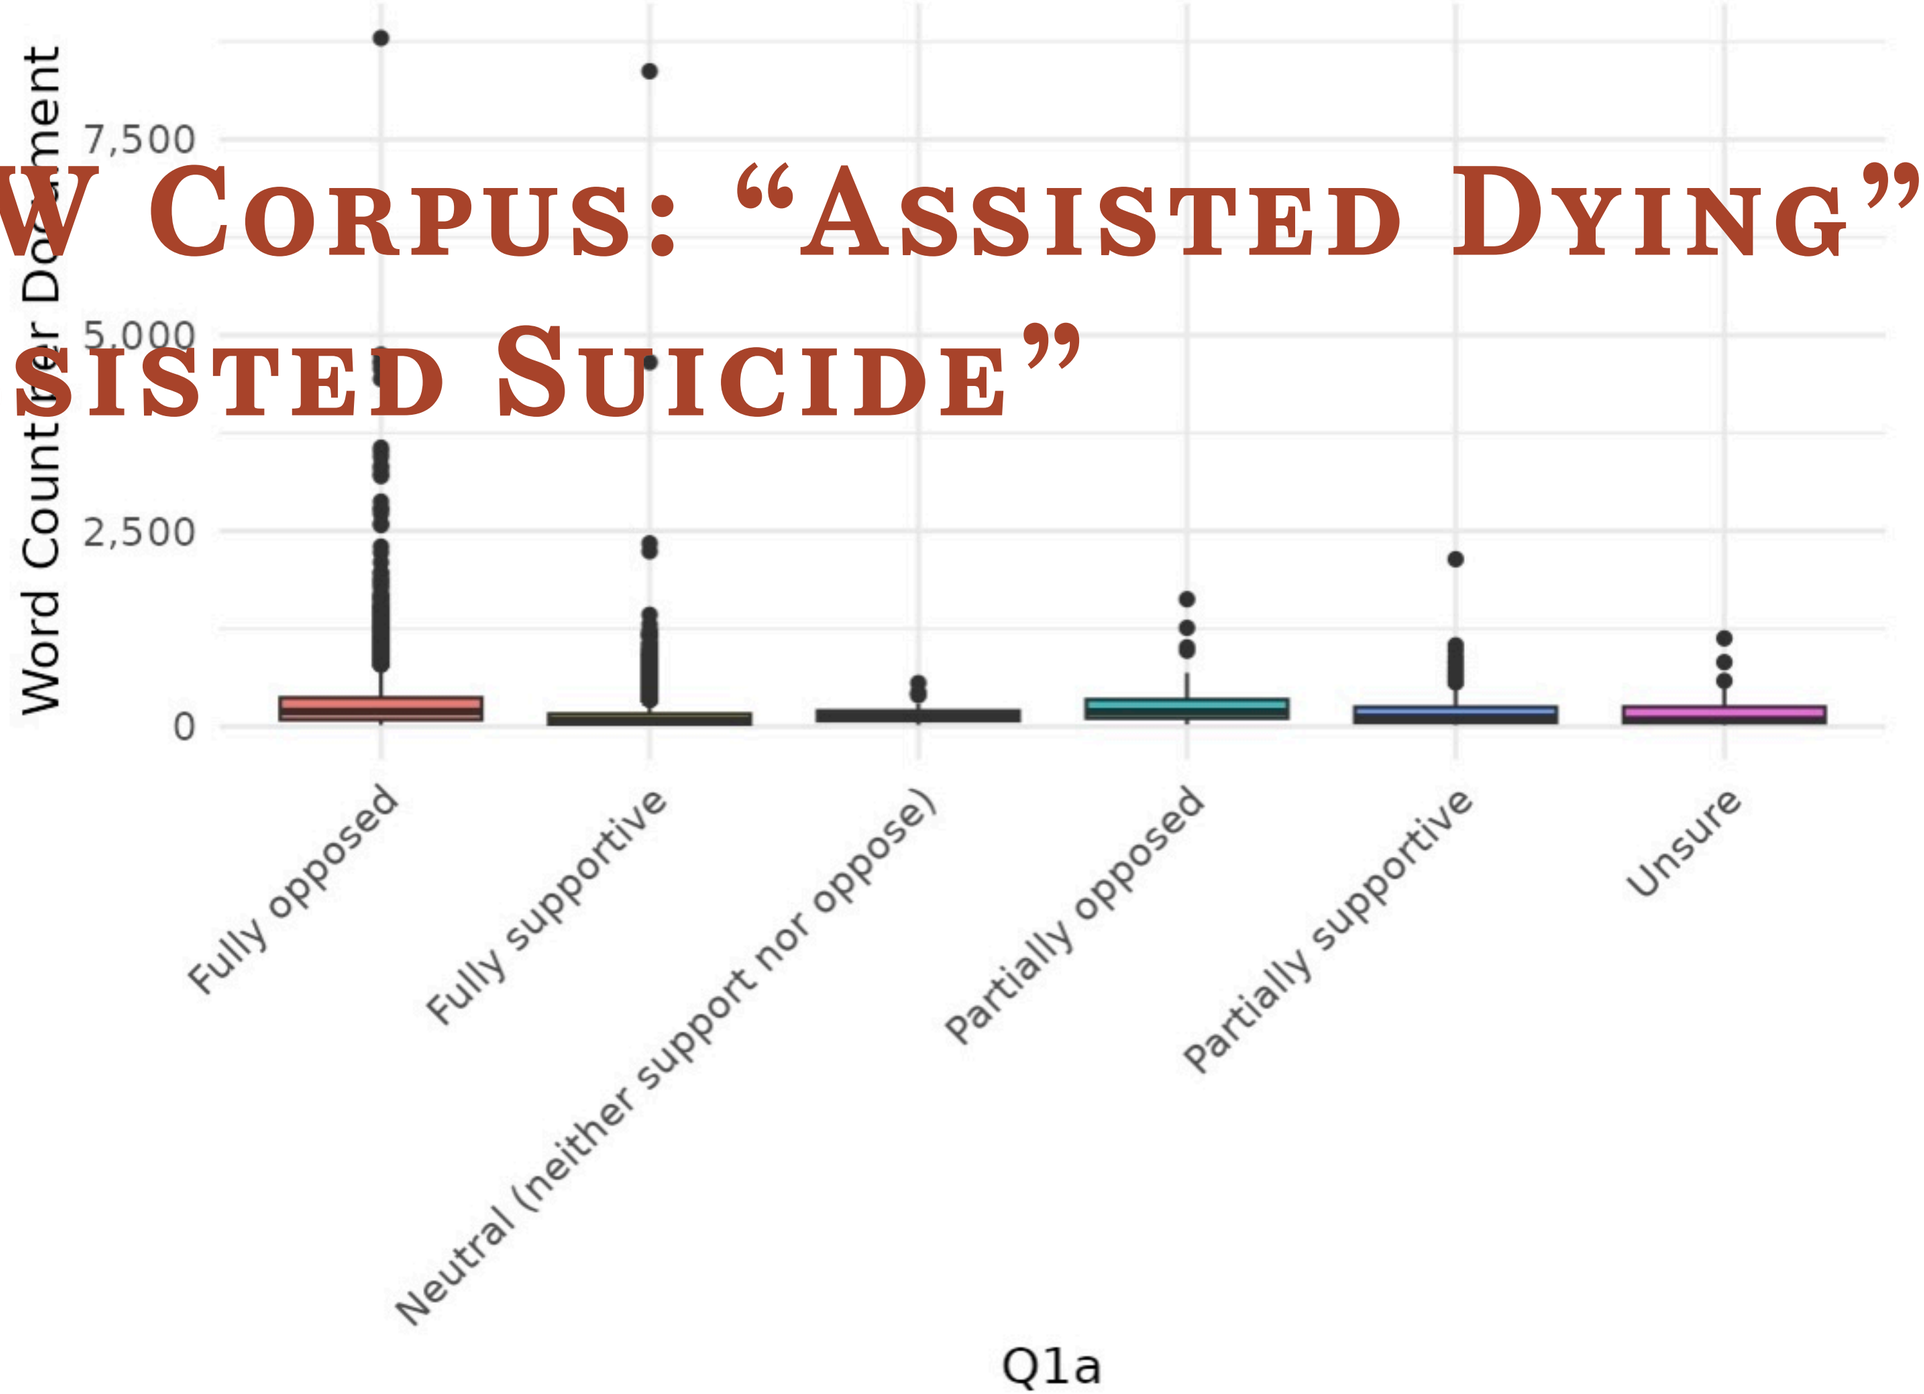

Terminology: “Assisted Suicide”

- Primarily used by opponents
- Argued to be more legally/practically accurate
- Critics say “assisted dying” is a euphemism
- Retains the moral/religious stigma of “suicide”
- Can emphasise individual’s action

Terminology: "Euthanasia"

- Greek "good death"
- Not technically accurate for current bill as euthanasia is physician-administered and this bill requires self-administration
